

THOR Index Rotation ETF

Systematic. Live since 2020.

/ THE STRATEGY

The fund rotates across the three major U.S. equity indexes, the S&P 500, the Dow Jones Industrial Average, and the Nasdaq 100, starting from an equal weighting. THOR's proprietary signal processing evaluates each index independently for risk-on or risk-off conditions.

When one index turns risk-off, the remaining two carry the allocation. When a second turns risk-off, half the portfolio moves to cash. When all three signal risk-off, the portfolio moves fully into short-duration Treasuries. Risk comes down in steps, not in a single binary switch.

/ WHY IT EXISTS

Buy-and-hold index investors ride every drawdown to the bottom. This strategy exists for allocators who want broad index exposure with a systematic exit path. It seeks to avoid the big hits and participate in the bulk of uptrends, stepping out of weakening indexes as the data turns rather than reacting after the damage is done.

/ THE TRACK RECORD

The underlying index rotation strategy has run live in separately managed accounts and model portfolios since 2020, through the 2020 crash, the 2022 bear market, and the rotations of 2024 and 2025. The ETF, launched in September 2024, runs the same systematic process in a fund wrapper. The vehicle is newer than the strategy behind it.
